

It is difficult to understand why this should have deteriorated so much, for in the Russo-Japanese War of 1904 it was the equal of any existing medical service.

The medical stores and equipment for Operation "Torch" arouse some interesting speculations. Each port party, although provided with 1,000 condoms, had only 200 tablets of sulphaguanidine, and one can only hope that the standards of sanitation were so exemplary as to prevent dysentery completely.

The book is full of incident and makes exciting reading, but the student of medical history with limited time at his disposal is advised to concentrate on Volume I. As in the other volumes of this series, the index gives little help to anyone requiring a ready reference and is the feature most deserving of adverse criticism.

THE FIFTH ANNUAL REPORT ON STRESS, 1955. Edited by Hans Seyle and Gunnar Heuser. New York : M. D. Publications Inc. Pp. 813. Illustrated. £6 11s.

This volume has maintained the high standard of previous volumes on this subject. It is an excellent reference book to the subject and contains an up-to-date bibliography.

Commencing with a synopsis of the concept of stress and reactions associated therewith it analyses the pathways through which stress stimuli are mediated and their effect on the various systems of the body. It contains an excellent chapter on Primary Aldosteronosis. It indicates the effects of stress on adrenocortical function and gives an interesting account of psychiatric stress in infancy.

This is a book which contains much biochemistry, physiology and pathology that is new and important and should be studied by all interested in the effects of stress on the individual.
